

Ashoka Cut

The Ashoka cut diamond is not merely a cut, it is a reimagining of the diamond's geometry, elongated into a graceful, rectangular form with softly rounded corners and a cascade of precisely placed facets. Inspired by an ancient Golconda diamond of legendary beauty, the cut transforms the gemstone into a pool of light with exceptional depth and presence.

Sourced from storied diamond regions such as South Africa, Botswana, Canada, and occasionally India, the Ashoka's appeal lies not in ostentation but in proportion the way its length draws the eye and its facets create a flowing, liquid brilliance. It carries the gravitas of history while remaining distinctly modern, a rare balance that makes it feel at once eternal and alive.

The Story Behind Arun's Fascination for Diamond : Ashoka Cut

For Arun, the Ashoka cut is a meditation on elegance in motion. Unlike more common cuts that flash and dazzle with predictable rhythm, the Ashoka seems to breathe it draws light in and releases it in slow, deliberate waves. It is the diamond equivalent of a perfectly measured line of poetry: nothing extra, nothing missing, every pause intentional.

When Arun chooses an Ashoka diamond, he is drawn not only to its historic namesake, Emperor Ashoka, the 3rd-century BCE ruler who turned from conquest to peace, but to the philosophy it implies. The cut feels like a transformation of force into grace, power into serenity. Its elongated shape mirrors the architectural lines he often seeks in his designs, while its rounded corners temper the structure with softness.

To him, an Ashoka diamond is not for the hurried. It is for the wearer who understands the pleasure of lingering, of letting the light unfold rather than explode. In an Arunashi creation, it becomes a quiet declaration: beauty need not shout to be heard, and eternity is best measured not in years, but in the depth of a single, unbroken glance.