

Bullet

The bullet diamond is a study in momentum. Defined by its elongated body and softly tapered point, this cut feels less like a shape and more like a gesture that moves forward with intent. Its silhouette draws the eye along a single, elegant line, allowing light to travel rather than scatter. The effect is sleek and cinematic, confident without ever needing to announce itself.

Bullet diamonds are sourced from diamond, rich regions such as India, Botswana, South Africa, and Russia, where naturally elongated rough allows this expressive form to emerge.

The Story Behind Arun's Fascination for the Diamond : Bullet

Arun is captivated by the bullet diamond because it refuses to stand still. To him, it carries the romance of motion, of pursuit, of ideas forming just as they begin to outrun language. The tapered point feels mischievous and quietly daring, while the length brings balance and control. It is a contradiction he finds endlessly amusing.

When selecting a bullet diamond, Arun looks for clarity of intention in the cut, a line that feels deliberate and a taper that feels inevitable. He is drawn to how the shape suggests direction, as if the diamond itself understands where it is going. In the world of Arunashi, the bullet becomes a symbol of curiosity sharpened by discipline, adventure informed by history, and elegance that knows precisely when to move forward.