

Emerald Cut

The emerald cut diamond is one of the most elegant and distinctive diamond cuts, instantly recognizable for its elongated, rectangular shape and stepped facets. Unlike brilliant cuts that emphasize fire and scintillation, the emerald cut highlights clarity and depth, offering a “hall of mirrors” effect where light reflects in broad, clean flashes. Its history traces back to the 16th century, originally developed for emeralds to reduce pressure during cutting, but its geometry proved so compelling that it became a defining diamond cut. Today, it remains a timeless choice, admired for sophistication and restraint.

The finest emerald cut diamonds come from the world’s leading diamond regions, South Africa, Botswana, Canada, and Russia, where rough crystals lend themselves to this noble geometry.

The Story Behind Arun’s Fascination for the Diamond : Emerald Cut

For Arun, the emerald cut diamond is pure architecture, light arranged in steps, clarity framed in geometry. He is fascinated by its ability to strip away ornamentation and leave only essence: long planes, clean lines, and a depth that feels like looking into infinity.

When selecting emerald cut diamonds, Arun seeks stones with perfect proportion, length to width that feels balanced, corners softened yet confident, and clarity that allows the viewer to see straight into the diamond’s heart. He values their restraint, the way they glow with quiet dignity rather than explode with brilliance.

In an Arunashi creation, the emerald cut diamond becomes a frame for contemplation, an invitation to slow down and truly look. To Arun, it is proof that beauty does not always arrive in sparks and fire; sometimes it arrives in silence, in depth, in the steady rhythm of geometry revealed.
