

Modified Pentagon Cut

The Modified Pentagon Cut diamond is geometry with a wild streak. Defined by five deliberate sides rather than the comfort of four or the symmetry of many, it feels architectural yet instinctive, order interrupted by curiosity. Light travels through it in unexpected ways, creating depth and tension rather than predictability. This is a diamond that suggests movement, intellect, and a refusal to settle for the obvious.

Diamonds used for modified pentagon cuts are sourced from the world's great diamond regions, South Africa, Botswana, Namibia, Russia's Yakutia region, Canada's Northwest Territories, Australia, and historically India's Golconda region, each origin contributing to the diamond's inner character.

The Story Behind Arun's Fascination for the Diamond : Modified Pentagon Cut

The pentagon cut with its five sides, has always carried symbolic weight, linked to balance, humanity, and the idea of the body in motion rather than at rest. For Arun, the modified pentagon cut feels alive. It resists complacency. It refuses symmetry without abandoning discipline.

This cut appeals to his love of controlled disruption. It feels like a conversation that veers off script, not to derail, but to deepen. The diamond becomes a study in confidence, knowing the rules well enough to bend them intelligently.

In Arunashi, the modified pentagon cut diamond represents curiosity made tangible. It's chosen by Arun for those who see beauty as an evolving dialogue, not a fixed conclusion. A shape for minds that wander, question, and understand that the most meaningful forms are often the ones brave enough to stand slightly apart, sharp, thoughtful, and unmistakably intentional.