

Portrait Cut

Imagine a diamond as thin as a whisper, its surface smooth and clear like a pane of ancient glass. The portrait cut diamond is an ode to minimalism, offering a unique transparency that feels both intimate and elusive. With minimal facets and a shape often reminiscent of a delicate windowpane, this cut allows light to flow through it gently, creating an effect that is more ethereal than showy. It's a diamond that doesn't demand attention but instead invites you to look deeper, to see what lies beneath.

The origins of the portrait cut trace back to ancient India, where it was used to protect miniature paintings, a tradition famously embraced by the Mughal Emperor Shah Jahan. These diamonds became a canvas of sorts, a protective veil that allowed art and memory to endure. Today, the portrait cut offers a fresh take on luxury, a piece that feels deeply personal and quietly bold. It is the ultimate understatement, a diamond that doesn't need to prove itself with excessive brilliance because its charm lies in its elegance and restraint.

The Story Behind Arun's Fascination for the Diamond : Portrait Cut

For Arun, the portrait cut diamond is more than a gemstone; it is a portal. He is drawn to its ability to frame a story, to create a connection between the viewer and what lies beneath. He loves how it challenges the traditional notion of a diamond as a mere object of brilliance and instead transforms it into a lens through which to view the world, whether that's capturing a hidden detail within the design or reflecting the light in an unexpected way.

When Arun incorporates portrait cut diamonds into Arunashi pieces, he does so with intention. He uses them to create moments of quiet intrigue, allowing the wearer to carry a secret close to the skin. It invites curiosity, rewards those who look closer, and aligns perfectly with Arun's philosophy: that true luxury lies not in what is immediately apparent, but in the mysteries that unfold over time.
